Course Description:

In the midst of the apostle Paul's second missionary journey he spent three weeks at a little coastal village on the Aegean Sea called Thessalonica. His success in converting both Jews and Gentiles to the new Christian faith aroused so much jealousy that he and his companion were driven from the town. Nevertheless, discipling of the Thessalonian converts was continued by mail, and two of these letters became part of the New Testament scriptures. Both of these epistles, although short, are profound, and they cover a variety of topics. Aspects of discipleship and discipling, notes regarding personal sanctification and holiness, teachings regarding the second coming of Christ and events related to that coming, and instructions regarding everyday living—including employment—are only a few of the topics covered in these epistles. The letters are both intensely personal and intensely practical, and we will explore these aspects in our times together.
